

Seasonal highlights

In the warmer months look for early forget-me-not, sheep's sorrel, mossy stonecrop and wall bedstraw.

The old Scots pines are characteristic of the Breckland landscape. The woods at East Wretham are mixed pine and native broadleaved trees and are nesting habitat for scarce birds including nightjar and redstart.

In the spring as well as Dr Long's wheatears, look for skylark, tree pipit and willow warbler. During winter watch for impressive gatherings of ducks and geese on the meres.

Of special note are the fluctuating meres. Just twelve of these mysterious waterbodies exist across the Brecks landscape, among the best known being Langmere and Ringmere at East Wretham. Water in these exceptional wetlands comes and goes unpredictably. As a result, unlike almost all freshwater wetlands, they are not subject to the process of succession by which wetlands fill up with plant material and gradually dry out.

Saving Norfolk's Wildlife for the Future

East Wretham Heath was a favourite of Dr Sydney Long, NWT's founder, who would visit in March each year to find the first of the returning wheatears which then nested here.
The reserve was purchased from three landowners in the early 1940s and was the first nature reserve in Breckland.

In the birch woods at the edge of Langmere is a stone in memory of Dr Sydney Long. He died in January 1939 and it is here that his colleagues erected a stone to record his life and his tremendous contribution to conservation.

Breck grassland is a nationally rare habitat, which is colonised by many species found nowhere else in the UK.

The bare ground left around the edge of the meres as water rises and falls is especially important for rare plants, many of them tiny. When wet, the meres are also home to many waterbirds including little grebe, gadwall, coot and lapwing.

Enjoying your visit

The nature reserve is open dawn till dusk, every day all year round. Free to enter. There is a small car park at the Brecks reserve office.

A network of paths enables visitors to access the habitats, wildlife and landscapes of this unique area. Please do not leave these paths, because some areas of quaking marsh and fen can be treacherous.

Can I bring my dog?

Yes, the site is Open Access, but walkers must observe reserve signage and information as restrictions (no dogs) apply in some areas. Please keep dogs on a short lead at all times. Outside this period walkers are requested to please keep dogs on a lead to avoid disturbance to livestock when present.
